NATIONAL SERVICES:

 The SAMH Information Service provides information and support on mental health. Whether you're seeking support, are looking for more information for you or someone you love, or just want to have a chat about mental health, we're here.

Talk to the team on 03448 000550 or email info@samh.org.uk – we're open 9am – 6pm, Monday to Friday (except Bank Holidays).

 Time for You is an online and virtual mental health support service, providing help for frontline workers across Scotland during the pandemic. Time for You offers access to three different levels of mental health support for workers affected by the pandemic, ranging from self-help resources, to access to talking therapies with trainee psychologists. Key workers can register for the service on the SAMH website.

OUR PRIORITIES

Our three key priorities as set out in our Standing Up for Scotland's Mental Health Manifesto are:

CHILDREN & YOUNG PEOPLE

1

Covid led to a 55 percent reduction in referrals to Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services (CAMHS) at a time when children and young people needed more support than ever. Despite this reduction in referrals and the commitments from government, one in five young people continue to be rejected from support, and left with little to no help for their mental health. Children, young people and their families feel like they have to be in crisis, which often means feeling suicidal or self-harming, in order to get help.

SAMH has a vision for children and young people's mental health support that would end rejected referrals, and instead connect children and young people to the help they need as quickly as possible. We want every local authority to develop community-based mental health triage for children and young people, so that they can be quickly assessed by a multi-disciplinary team and be connected to the right support.

PSYCHOLOGICAL WELLBEING SUPPORT

It still takes too long and is too difficult to get help for a mental health problem. People have told us that it is very difficult to access psychological wellbeing support through the NHS. For those who do access such support, around one quarter will have to wait over four months before their first appointment. We know that people who wait longer for help are more likely to experience a deterioration in their mental health, so we need to provide support at the earliest opportunity.

Covid has made the struggle to get help even harder for many people, with restrictions placed on movements, the withdrawal of face-to-face support, and the cancellation or postponement of treatment. Mental health support options that are available quickly and locally are needed now more than ever.

At SAMH, we believe that people should be able to access psychological wellbeing support without the need for either a referral or waiting lists.

To achieve this, we need an expanded network of psychological wellbeing services at a local level, which the third and voluntary sector is well-placed to deliver.

SUICIDE PREVENTION

Despite the progress made over the last decade, two people still die by suicide every day in Scotland. In 2020, 805 people lost their life to suicide. Although this was a decrease of 3.6% since 2019, this is still higher than the previous five year average. Men are three times more likely to die by suicide than women, however the female suicide rate is at its highest annual total since 2011. Suicide is also strongly linked to poverty, with people living in our most deprived communities over three times more likely to die by suicide. Worryingly, a fifth of deaths by suicide in 2020 were amongst people under the age of 30.

SAMH would like to see an increase in community capacity to prevent suicide by providing nationwide access to support and suicide prevention training.

- 2 Annual changes in suicide figures are based on relatively small numbers so may not be statistically significant. It is conventional to pool rates over a five-year period, and develop rolling averages to account for yearly fluctuations.
